Every fifteen seconds someone commits a crime of domestic violence in the United States, and most violators will be court-mandated to receive group treatment. Outcome studies of traditional treatment programs (those with confrontational or educational approaches) indicate high rates of dropping out and low effectiveness, lending urgency to the need to find an alternative method. This book describes a cutting-edge treatment approach that creates effective, positive changes in domestic violence offenders. Solution-focused therapy is a brief, non-confrontational, client-centered, strengths-based approach that emphasizes the person's inherent capacity for change, rather than emphasizing their problems and deficits. By focusing on “solution-talk” instead of “problem-talk,” clients are assisted in developing useful goals and solution behaviors that are then amplified, supported, and reinforced through a solution-building process. The book will be of great interest to professionals and graduate students in social work, psychology, and counseling.

The Hedghog and the Fox

Responding to Family Violence

Treating Violence deals with the problem of violence by mental health professionals. Over the last twenty years violence by the mentally ill has grown from a peripheral concern to dominate debate about services. Scientific studies have established beyond reasonable doubt that mental disorders lead to violence in a minority of sufferers, whilst a series of homicide inquiries brought the media spotlight to bear on the real and imagined failings of mental health services. Consequently, health services have faced violence risk assessment thrust upon them by worried managers and politicians. Clinicians were bewildered by the growing number of risk scales and felt to be threatened by the promises of better management. This book provides a way out of the confusion. It summarises the evidence, critically reviews risk assessment methods, and presents a strong case for improving management through structured clinical assessment. In this provocative and controversial account, standardised risk assessment is discussed in a critical, non-technical way, with a reminder that nobody can predict the future. There is advice for the clinician on when and how to use the tool, how to conduct violence risk management, along with an overview of clinical methods. The book explains the consequences of these methods in the UK, with the results of a new study reviewing the findings of a series of professional risk assessment tools and recommendations for their use; and a strong defence of structured clinical assessment as the best way of managing violence risk. The book should be read by all mental health professionals, crime victims and their families, as well as a starting point for new interpretation of Archilochus's epigram.

Treating Violence for Abusive Women

"The fox knows many things, but the hedgehog knows one big thing." This ancient Greek aphorism, preserved in a fragment from the poet Archilochus, describes the central thesis of Isaiah Berlin's masterly essay on Leo Tolstoy and the philosophy of history, the subject of the epistle to War and Peace. Although there have been many interpretations of the adage, Berlin uses it to mark a fundamental distinction between human beings who are 'hedgehogs' and those who are 'foxes'. A parable that helps explain his philosophy of history: Tolstoy was a fox, not a hedgehog. One of Berlin's most celebrated works, this extraordinary essay offers profound insights about Tolstoy, historical understanding, and human psychology. This new edition features a revised text that updates Berlin's translation of the many translations of the many translations of the many passages in foreign languages, a new foreword in which Berlin biographer Michael Ignatieff explains the enduring appeal of Berlin's essay, and a new appendix that provides an overview of the key themes in Berlin's life and work, including excerpts from reviews and Berlin's letters, as well as a starting point for new interpretation of Archilochus's epigram.
